He's not that man. He's not him. She told herself over and over. She would convince herself of it. What she had with Gerritt was greater than that; it was dynamic, driving, and compelling. She couldn't stop the words from leaving her lips though she knew he wouldn't return them. "I love you, Gerritt Finnegan," she said. With all her heart. With everything in her. He was the man she wanted, the husband of her dreams.

He kissed her forehead. "I know you do, Maire."

Maire O'Fallen, daughter of famous Irish tenor, Michael O'Fallen, has lived a life of privilege, shielded by her extended family and her father's loving hand. Then one horrible night strips it all away.

The victim of rape, she turns to Gerritt Finnegan, the boy she's always loved, to drive the demons in her mind away. And he steps up, keeping her secret, eventually offering his hand in marriage.

But their marriage is built on sand, which time, circumstance, and one final twist of fate threaten to destroy all together.

A powerful story of personal and marital recovery from a horrible crime by best-selling author, SUZANNE D. WILLIAMS. Book 4 of The Florida Irish series.

This story is not recommended to young or sensitive readers, but is framed by Christian values.*
