Payne has always had trouble fitting in, and being abandoned by his parents has left him reluctant to trust anyone. He knows he's different, but he has no idea how different until his grandfather invites him to Blackwater Falls—a beautiful estate he's offered as his inheritance. Payne thinks it's too good to be true, and it turns out he's right.

Walking the wooded trails of the estate begins to awaken something in Payne. As he discovers his Fae nature, he learns his family's legacy: to serve as caretakers to a preserve for Sidhe, Fae, and other magical creatures. Word of the return of the long-lost Fae prince reaches the preserve's inhabitants, and Payne must navigate a world of political intrigue he can't begin to understand as various factions seek to entice him to their Courts.

Dragon Aden Canicus offers to tutor Payne, and the tension between them is instant and growing. But prickly and aloof Aden keeps Payne at arm's length. Unable to trust their connection when his family is threatened, Payne seeks other allies. Their direction leads him down a dangerous path where a dragon's affection is the least of his concerns and may even end his life.
