Secrets are revealed; questions must be answered, as two lovers caught in a maelstrom of opposing loyalties face their toughest fights yet.

For five years, Earth ruled Hathe, taking what they needed, especially the energy-rich mineral, urgonium it must have to survive. For five years, the Hathians kept their world safe by hiding behind a façade, posing as subservient peasants and pretending all the wealth and knowledge of Hathe has vanished. Then came the time for Hathe to fight back, and for the Terrans to learn how wrong they were.

Now the war is over.

Hamon Radcliff was once head of security for the Terran forces. His wife Marthe an Castre belonged to the Hathian resistance. With the ending of the war, the truth of Hathe is revealed, all the betrayals and secrets exposed. Surviving the peace was always going to be tough for lovers caught on opposite sides. Both did whatever was needed to protect their home worlds, and those actions have consequences. The end of the war doesn't take away all the anger and bitterness still lingering on both sides, and when it turns its glare on Marthe and Hamon, peace time becomes downright dangerous.
